Completing a 36-month course in 30 months, Patel finished at the top of his class despite having had no previous college background.[19]
Returning to India, Patel settled in Ahmedabad and became one of the city's most successful barristers. Wearing European-style clothes and sporting urbane mannerisms, he became a skilled bridge player. Patel nurtured ambitions to expand his practice and accumulate great wealth and to provide his children with modern education. He had made a pact with his brother Vithalbhai to support his entry into politics in the Bombay Presidency, while Patel remained in Ahmedabad to provide for the family.[20

Vallabhbhai Jhaverbhai Patel,[9][10] one of the six children of Jhaverbhai Patel and Ladba, was born in Nadiad, Gujarat.[11] Patel's date of birth was never officially recorded; Patel entered it as 31 October on his matriculation examination papers.[12] He belonged to the Patidars, specifically the Leva Patel community of Central Gujarat; although after his fame, both Leva Patel and Kadava Patidar have claimed him as one of their own.[13]
Patel travelled to attend schools in Nadiad, Petlad, and Borsad, living self-sufficiently with other boys. He reputedly cultivated a stoic character. A popular anecdote recounts that he lanced his own painful boil without hesitation, even as the barber charged with doing it trembled.[14] When Patel passed his matriculation at the
